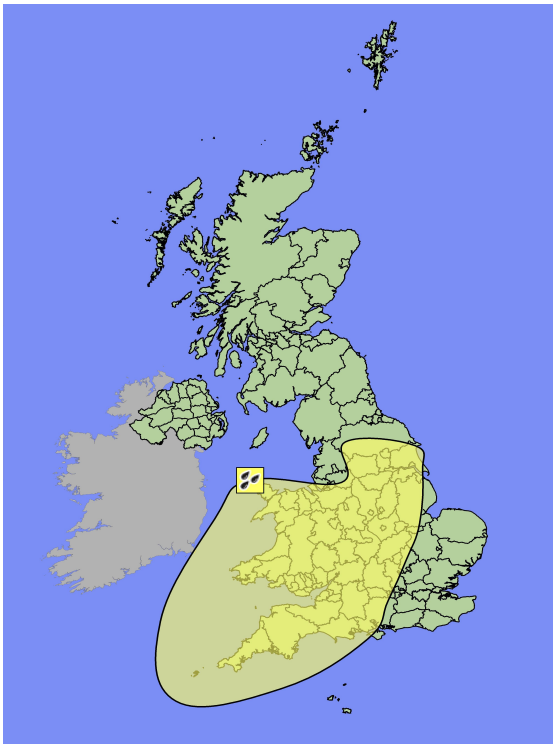
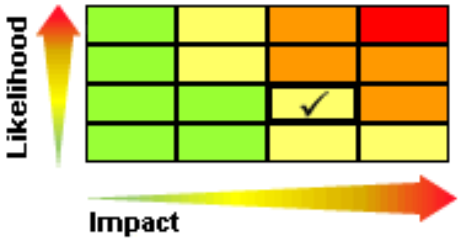
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A deepening depression is heading towards the UK from the southwest. The path taken by this feature is important for determining the distribution of strong winds and heavy rain, and at this stage the track is uncertain. However, it looks likely that more than 20 mm will fall quite widely across the region indicated.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 10:00 on Sat, 24th Nov 2012 until 23:59 on Sat, 24th Nov 2012

Further persistent rain will spread across England and Wales on Saturday, turning heavy at times later. Given existing levels of saturation, the public should be aware of the risk of localised flooding.

In addition, winds will strengthen, bringing the risk of gusts into the 60's of MPH in exposed parts of Southwest England during the evening, which could cause damage to trees.
